Intracranial extradural hematoma associated to sinusitis and subdural empyema

Hematoma epidural intracraneal asociado con sinusitis y enfisema subdural

J. Vaquero\textsuperscript{a,∗}, A. Parajón\textsuperscript{a}, E. Ferreira\textsuperscript{a}, A. Ramos\textsuperscript{b}

\textsuperscript{a} Department of Neurosurgery, Puerta de Hierro Hospital, Autonomous University, Madrid, Spain
\textsuperscript{b} Infectious Diseases Unit, Puerta de Hierro Hospital, Autonomous University, Madrid, Spain

Available online 24 October 2011

Intracranial non-traumatic extradural hematoma is generally associated to coagulation disorders, dural vascular malformations and metastasis to the skull. Exceptionally, it has been described in association to sinusitis or ear middle infection\textsuperscript{1-3}. Our present image was obtained from a 31-year-old male patient diagnosed of maxillary sinusitis.

\textsuperscript{∗} Corresponding author.
\textit{E-mail address:} jvaqueroc@telefonica.net (J. Vaquero).

0014-2565/$ - see front matter © 2011 Elsevier España, S.L. All rights reserved.
doi:10.1016/j.rce.2011.07.023
Intracranial extradural hematoma associated to sinusitis and subdural empyema that suffered sudden obnubilation and left hemiparesis in the course of treatment with intravenous vancomycin and cefotaxime (fig. 1).

References